The Song of Hiawatha

And they knew their doom was broken,

On the ledge's roof the hunters
Leaped, and broke in all amaze;
Streamed the sunshine through the crevice,
Sprang the hunters through the doorway,
Hid themselves in deeper water,
In the channel of the streamlet;
But the mighty Pau-Puk-Kewewin
Could not pass beneath the doorway:
He was puff'd with pride and breeding,
He was swollen like a bladder.

Through the roof looked Hiawatha,
Cried aloud, "O Pau-Puk-Kewewin!
Vain are all your craft and cunning,
Vain your manifold disguises!
Will I know you, Pau-Puk-Kewewin?
With their clubs they beat and brooded him,
Beat to death poor Pau-Puk-Kewewin,
Pounded him as maize is pounded,
Till his skull was crushed to pieces.

See all features, ribs and features,
Bare his bones on poles and branches,
Bare the body of the hunter;
But the ghost, the Jucki-in-tan,
Thought and felt as Pau-Puk-Kewewin,
Still lived on as Pau-Puk-Kewewin.

The Mancing of Pau-Puk-Kewewin

And in fastened, arose, and struggled,
Waving thither, waving thither,
As the currents of a rapids
Struggle with their shreds of deer-skin,
When the rotary whirl is blowing:
Till it drew itself together,
Till it rose up from the body,
Till it took the form and features
Of the cunning Pau-Puk-Kewewin
Vanishing into the forest.

But the wary Hiawatha
Saw the figure ere it vanished,
Saw the form of Pau-Puk-Kewewin
Glide into the soft blue shadow
Of the pine-trees of the forest,
Toward the spaces of white beyond it,
Toward an opening in the forest,
Like a wind it rushed and passed,
Bending all the boughs before it,
And behind it, as the rain comes,
Came the steps of Hiawatha.

To a lake with many islands
Came the limpid Pau-Puk-Kewewin,
Where among the water-lilies
Puffed and blew, the leaves were sailing,
Through the mists of mists floating,
